Ok, so cobbler doughs can run the gamut and everyone may have their own personal preference as to what a best cobbler dough should look and taste like. I have made all types but always preferred the very first cobbler that I ever made - back in the 1960s with a recipe from the Betty Crocker Cookbook (the 3 ring red-checked binder cookbook). There are several recipes in that cookbook that are unequalled anywhere else. The cobbler in Cast Iron Skillet Cookbook looked similar and I was eager to try it. The ingredients were somewhat different and when I mixed it up and it was very dense (I tried not to overmix) I thought "oh no" this will never make the grade. I put it atop prepared fruit in a glass square pan and baked at 375 for 35 minutes (I did not have the 6 small cast iron skillets called for in the recipe). Well...it was like heaven. So light and luscious (not at all cakelike) and my hubby and I gobbled it right up. Left it overnight on the counter (it is pretty cold here) and it was just as delectable, maybe more so, the next day. A real winner. We are trying the buttermilk fried chicken tomorrow.
