Col. Stephen E. Wright, USAF (Ret.), served in the United States Air Force for 30 years and is currently the Education Advisor and Deputy Commandant at the School of Advanced Air and Space Studies at Maxwell Air Force Base in Montgomery, Alabama. He is the author of An Aerospace Strategy for the Aerospace Nation (978-1288300471) and numerous articles on Air Force issues.

I was pleased with the 34th edition when I first entered the Air Force a few years ago. Purchased this "current" edition so I would have all of the updates. There don't appear to be any updates from previous editions. They have entirely wrong outdated (at least 8 years old) information for several major installations, no reference to post-9/11 GI bill, only Montgomery GI bill, etc. This is all just at a first glance. I'm sure as I get more into the book I will find further inadequacies. If you have an older version, don't waste your time upgrading.

Ordered this as a sturdy guide for my daughter. Good information. Arrived well in advance of the expected delivery date.

A good book to read when you're starting out in the military as an officer. It gives you some basic knowledge of a few things to expect in the military. A good read for all the free time I had at officer training school.....not really, but I did read this a few weeks before attending, and am still going through the other chapters.

Ever since I was an AFROTC cadet I have always had the latest copy of the Air Force Officer's Guide. When I got the newest one I was not disappointed. It now has color photos, too. This is very helpful. So is the order of precedence for wearing medals and ribbons. Thanks for including this in the latest edition. In the future I will continue to order the latest editions.

Item as advertised.

Lots of good info for future and current Air Force officers. Bought this for my daughter who will commission in a couple of years - she says it's an excellent reference.

Has an extremely high variety of updated and relevant actions and instructions on how to be an effective and knowledgeable Air Force Officer.

purchased for my son who is in Air Force ROTC, he said it be a big help
